

6516205311.txt

There is a time and place for the FCC to get involved in the effects of technology on our society. Unfortunately, the FCC seems to get it wrong and does not seem to understand the needs of the public.

Instead of solving the "spam" problem which has made e-mail almost useless, the FCC seems to want to interfere with the benefits of satellite radio. The broadcasting industry has forfeited its right to additional protection by not providing the service that the public wants. It should not be bailed out by government.

The progress of technology should not and can not be stopped.

P.S. Since this is a public record, I do not want to risk exposing my e-mail address to more spammers.